Paul J. Choquette, III Named to Lead Gilbane Building Company's Mid-Atlantic Business Unit

Construction industry veteran focused on expanding Gilbane's presence in multiple public and private market sectors in Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia.

Washington, DC – January 15, 2013 – Gilbane Building Company is pleased to announce that Paul J. Choquette, III has been promoted to senior vice president and will now be overseeing all operations for the company's Mid-Atlantic Business Unit. Mr. Choquette, a member of the fifth generation of the Gilbane family, most recently served as regional business development manager for the Mid-Atlantic region, which encompasses Maryland, the District of Columbia and the Commonwealth of Virginia. During his tenure in the region, Gilbane played a critical role in the construction of landmark projects including Ft. Belvoir Community Hospital, the U.S. Capitol Dome Skirt Rehabilitation, the National Dwight D. Eisenhower Presidential Monument, and the District of Columbia Public Schools Dunbar High School project. Mr. Choquette is the first member of the fifth generation to become a senior vice president for Gilbane.

“Paul's ability to recognize clients' business needs and his strength of conviction to implement new approaches have helped him excel,” said Bill Gilbane, Jr., president and COO. “Paul has been instrumental in outlining Gilbane's long-term strategic vision for the Mid-Atlantic region by assembling an elite team of executives, superintendents, estimators, and builders who live by Gilbane's core values and are committed to safety and owner advocacy. I'm confident he will continue to provide excellent leadership to the region in this new capacity.”

In his career with Gilbane Building Company, Mr. Choquette served in a variety of positions including superintendent, project engineer, business development manager and area manager. He
